The formal unveiling of the monument before us furnishes the occasion for this public gathering. The monument itself has been erected by appropriations of money made engaged upon this field in the great hattle which was lought here in July, 1863 So far as the significance of the monument itself is concerned, so far as it serves to per petuate in an especial manner the significance of the history which was made here, it would have been entirely proper for all the States whose troops were engaged in the magnificent charge of the Army of Northern Virginia and its repulse by the Army of the Potomac to have joined in making such an appropriation

He procured a peck of at ples and submitted them to careful chemical analysis. They had been sprayed twice last June with Paris green of the strength of one pound of the material to 200 gallons of water. The process to which they were submitted affords such accurate results that if 2,000 bushels of apples contained two and a half grains of arsenic, the poison would have been detected by this method.

Every care was exercised, but not a trace of arsenic could be detected, thus showing the complete absence of the poison in apples that had been twice sprayed with Paris green. The Canadian government, therefore, amounces that there is not the slightest danger of poison in using sprayed apples.

Back Yards and Disease. The neglected back yard is the mos

successful incubator of zymotic diseases in existence. Their germs may burst into unhealthy vigor in untrapped sewers and dirty sink pipes, but the filthy back yard is where they grow to their greatest power to wage devastating warfare upon humanity; it is there that the typhoid waxes strong and spreads itself in its pride. There are few back yards that would pass an examination for cleanliness and purity at this time of year. All during the cold days of winter it was very convenient for Mary, or even the mistres herself, to open the kitchen door and quickly throw the greasy dishwater or similar liquid refuse out on the snow It saved them time and trouble and considerable amount of chilling. Of course they didn't know they were planting the seeds of disease, but they In another week or two the warm su will begin to awaken life in them and month or two later that life will be seen at work on the lives of the children of the house. It is the duty of ever householder now to see that his back yard is given a thorough cleaning, it refuse moved to a place where it can do the least harm to human health, and a powerful disinfectant scattered where it formerly lay.

Slacked lime is good, carbolic acid is better, but the cleaning must be done in any event. The outlay will be inexpensive; the income will be enormous in the carbon of good hunth and good lives.

ving of good health and good lives as well. Clean your back yards and disinfect them. You owe it to your children and your neighbor, and he owes the same to his and to you.

Kicking Cows.

Cows acquire the habit of kicking and stepping about while the milking is performed, on account of timidity or pain and this habit becomes chronic by rough and brutal treatment. Milking the cow is in a measure a surgical operation, and during the process if she cannot or will not be quiet, she could be confined by some restraint other than human mus cles, for the cow's strength is the greatest. The weakly purty gets angry, and rough treatment is the result; hence the necessity of some method of convenient y restraining the cow within the limit of human strength, says F. C. Curtis in American Agriculturist. Cows stanchioned and standing at a "hoist, do not kick with the right foot, which is the most objectionable one for kicksoon puts her right foot in advance of the other, which shifts her greatest weight on the left foot, and then she is ready for kicking. My plan is to com pel the cow to "hoist" and then hold her there. This is best done by placing her in the stanchion, and taking a small rope or strap about eight feet long, with a loop on one end: loop it around the left hind leg, and drop it down just above the dew claws, then pass it around the stanchion one and a half limes, draw the foot well forward and contine it there. This requires so little strength that there is no cause for anger even in the most writable person. Some cows give up at once, while others struggle until they become accustomed to the restrain. This mode of confining the cow is particularly valuable to young heifers, all cows that step about while milking, and ordinary kickers. Sometimes find it insufficient, in which case I place the rope around or above the hamstring joint and over the top of the stauchion. drawing the foot nearly or quite off the floor. If I find this insufficient, which is seldom. I draw the left foot forward as first described, and then confine the other foot backward to a ring or post. then the cow is compelled to stand. Confining the right foot backward is a much more muscular task than drawing the left foot forward, and requires a stronger rope. I have never found in necessary to do more than confine the left foot forward, with all cows I have raised, but I have bought unmanageable cows cheap and compelled them to stand while being milked. This method #### is quickly applied, and holds the cow in the right position to milk.

Sawdust as a Fertilizer. It is not out of place to give a word of caution against using much sawdust of the soft woods or those which sour it the process of decomposition, such as pine, hemlock, basswood and oak. On most soils an extensive use of these woods will impart a tendency to cold ness in the soil and to the growing of moss if land is left long in grass. This has been the result in other parts of the country where sawdust of these woods had been extensively used. The sawdust of beech, maple and ash, and other woods of this character, which decom pose quickly, has been used to a consid erable extent in some of the eastern states with seeming beneficial results. especially upon clayish soils, their chief office being to lighten the otherwise heavy soil.—Prairie Farmer.

CLOVER MANUEL - The Prairie Farmer reports the practice of a successful orchardist in enriching his land by the well-known method of allowing a crop of clover to rot on the ground. When the trees are six or seven years old, not before, he sows clover, the large kind being preferred, cutting the first crop and allowing it to lie and remain on the ground. In very dry weather it is partly raked nearer the trees. The owner estimates that the standing clover is not worth more than $3 an acre but that any other fertilizer cannot be applied for four times that sum. SPAIN has cancelled the prohibition of the importation of American pork, and it is now admitted to all ports of the
